Former Mokena Man Tell of Tidal Wave Experience In Japan

In an exclusive interview with Mr. Lester Sterner of Spencer, Ill., just returned from Kozaby rescue boat, station WVTQ brought this account of the earthquake that hit southern Japan early Saturday morning, Dec. 20.

Sterner, a civilian attached to the Wakayama Military government team, had gone to the town of Kozaby with his interpreter and four assistants to show educational films to the Japanese population. At 4:25 the morning of December 20 Sterner was awakened by a terrific shaking. The windows in his room broke, the plaster fell from the ceiling and tiles on the wall came crashing down around him. Unable to leave the building because of the terrific shaking, described by Sterner, as "the way a dog would shake a cat", he and his associates remained in the hotel until the quake subsided.

Then, warned of the danger of a tidal wave, they fled to their jeep and started to the hills in back of the city.

Their passage of escape from the city was blocked by a house which had collapsed across the narrow road. Stopping, they heard the moans of a woman in agony and pushing aside some of the wreckage, they were able to save the life of an elderly Japanese woman.

Luckily they were far enough away from the path of the tidal wave, and escaped injury. Returning to the city, they passed thru the remains of a small suburb that had been completely washed out to sea. As Sterner put it, "It seemed as though two giant hands had reached into that cove and dragged the entire town into the sea". In a lumbering district, the tidal wave swept in and washed out to sea a tremendous amount of cut timber that was to have been used for wreckage, and desolation strewed his path back to Kozaby. Boats had been thrown up into the streets from the quiet little canal and lumber and wreckage was everywhere.

Unable to establish communication with the outside world, Sterner and his party set out by Jeep for Kushimoto. All the roads were blocked by wreckage, but they finally succeeded in getting around it by loading the jeep on a flat car and pushing it across a railroad trestle. On the other side, the road was clear and they were able to proceed on to Kushimoto. Along the way they drove thru a tunnel that had been made right thru a house which had been pushed out into the middle of the road by the quake.

In another instance, Sterner went on to describe a house that had been pulverized by a boulder which had crashed down from the mountains above. At Kushimoto, Sterner and his party were forced to abandon their jeep at the local police station.

At five thirty Sunday afternoon, a 25th Division army crash boat, the Lightning Maru, the 2nd, commanded by Lt. Earl C. Hardy of Corpus Christi arrived at Kushimoto to pick up Sterner.

From the reports of the local authorities it will be at least three weeks before the roads will be sufficiently cleared so that Mr. Sterner will be able to recover his jeep and motion picture from Kushimoto.

Mr. Sterner gave credit for his being alive today to his jeep, and said that "the Jeep certainly proved its worth to me". Arriving back at Wakayama at 11:30 this morning, Mr. Sterner reported in at Military government headquarters and will now pass a quiet Christmas Eve at the Bokido hotel.

Unable to get water because the watermain had been broken by the quake, in the town of Shingoo, the fire department was helpless and the blaze raged uncontrolled. When the damage was finally estimated 14,389 people were homeless and 37 were known dead. Most of the townspeople were huddled on the shoreline, seeking protection from the bitter cold by huddling in little shacks constructed from the ruins of Shingoo, a far cry from Christmas Eve as we know it in the States.

LUENSER KOHL NUPTIALS

Swirling snow flurries and overcast skies that prevailed out of doors February 1 seemed only to accentuate the brightness of the bridal picture presented at the Evangelical Community church in Blue Island, when Ruth Luenser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eric Luenser 12245 Maple, Blue Island, walked down the aisle on the arm of her father to become the bride of Mansfield Kohl, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Kohl of Tinley Park.

She carried white roses with a detachable orchid in the center with sweet peas tied to the flowing streamers. Her gift from the groom was pearls. In traditional style, Ruth had something old, new, borrowed and blue.

Miss Jerry Nelson, a friend of the bride, was maid of honor and wore a peach net formal, with head-dress and gloves of aqua. She carried pink roses. Miss Loretta Gebert, the bride's cousin was bridesmaid and wore a pink net formal with head-dress and gloves of yellow. Miss Mary Ann Luenser, the bride's sister was Junior bridesmaid. Her formal was of aqua net and her head-dress and gloves were pink. Both carried pink roses. Miss Peggy Witt, flower girl, was lovely in a light green net formal with a sweetheart bonnet and pink gloves. She carried a colonial bouquet of pink carnations.

Bobby Fairman, wearing a tuxedo and carnation boutonniere, was ring bearer, carrying the ring on a white satin pillow trimmed with net. All men of the bridal party wore tuxedos with a carnation boutonniere.

The best man was James Harper, a friend of the groom. The ushers were Lee Luenser, the bride's cousin, and Charles Nelson, a friend of the bride. The newlyweds received many lovely gifts. A reception was held at the Odd Fellows hall in Blue Island where 150 guests were present.

Increase Milk With Electrical Deicers

Higher Production Can Be Secured With Control

Of all the problems which livestock farmers face during the winter, one of the most annoying is the task of preventing ice from coating the surface of their stock tanks.

An adequate year-round water supply is essential to enable dairy cows to continue top milk production and to maintain economical gains on beef cattle and hogs. A pressure water system will do the job most of the year, but what about those freezing months farmers now are facing?

The following results of tests conducted by Purdue university help in approaching the problem: There is no advantage in actually warming water for stock; the maintenance of an ice-free drinking hole is sufficient; water under pressure eliminates the necessity of having large capacity storage tanks.

Given these findings, agricultural engineers have turned to electricity as a means of overcoming winter stock tank worries. Research has shown that electric heaters, with wattages rated as low as 300, are capable of keeping ice-free holes open in small tanks without difficulty. Among newly developed electric stock tank heaters, operating at low cost, is a device which is designed to float on the surface of the water. It consists of a hollow metal disk, encircled by a heating element and containing a thermostat. Tests show that it can keep a recommended drinking hole open in temperatures far below zero.

KNOW YOUR BREED Texas Longhorns By W. J. DRYDEN

This ancient breed of cattle, which used to roam in the southwest in vast herds, is being successfully rescued from threatened extinction by the U. S. Fish and Wildlife service.

Texas Longhorns first were introduced to this continent in 1521 by

Gregorio Villalobos, a governor-general of "New Spain."

With the introduction of heavier, beefier cattle, the Longhorns began to disappear.

Shelter for Calves

Shelters for calves and heifers should be dry and well-bedded. The Washington State college individual pens about 24 to 30 square feet in area may be used for small calves. They help prevent the calves from sucking each other, make it easier to feed the calves individually and help to prevent spread of disease.

Penicillin Fails as Pear Blight Control

While penicillin has proven the wonder drug of the century, it has proven utterly unsuited to control pear and walnut blights, according to work done by Dr. B. A. Rudolph, University of California deciduous fruit station at San Jose. Large concentrations failed completely to check the disease when injected into the trees. It is believed that excessive dilution of the drug by the sap stream is responsible.

COLOR AND GAIETY MARK FIESTA... Representing the Anglo-Saxon influence in the annual mid-winter Charro Days Fiesta at Brownsville, Texas, are these two "Americanos" dancing the "jarabe tapatio," a typical Mexican hat dance, under a banana tree.

IN THESE UNITED STATES

Gala Texas Fete Revives Colorful Days on Frontier

BROWNSVILLE, TEX.—Fired by the passion of hot Spanish blood and tempered by subdued Anglo-Saxon influence, the Charro Days Fiesta, Carnival of Nations, major winter celebration of Texas, crowds three centuries of life along America's first and last frontier into four days and nights of frolicsome gaiety.

Along the border of the United States and Mexico, where the blood of Americans and Latins once clashed but now blends, 300,000 persons from both sides of the Rio Grande will cavort on February 13, 14, 15 and 16, in an hilarious pageant of pre-Lenten fantasy unparalleled in America.

Charro Days harkens back to the colorful days when titled Spanish landowners and virile soldiers brought the sword and the cross of Old World civilization to a wild American frontier.

To make the celebration as authentic as possible, residents of the semi-tropical Rio Grande valley of Texas and their neighbors from northern Mexico dress in typical costumes of the early day Spanish colonial and his lady.

The men become charros, symbolic of that Spanish cavalier, horseman and gentleman for whom the fiesta is named. A charro was a young man of vitality, usually of noble descent, who rode the plains of Mexico in quest of adventure and love.

Colorful Attire.

He was dressed in tight-fitting trousers, embroidered with bright braid, a jacket of dark hue with silver buttons, a gay sombrero and silver spurs. His beard was trimmed neatly, pointedly.

His feminine counterpart was the lovely lady he addressed as "China," a name derived from the holiday costume she wore—the china poblana. It consisted of a full length, light spreading skirt spangled with uncounted bright sequins and a blouse of rainbow hues. She wore white gardenia or scarlet hibiscus blossoms in her hair in anticipation of the love tryst with the charro, who rode up on his black stallion to serenade her at the Spanish hacienda.

Aura of Gentility.

Even today, at each Charro Days Fiesta, descendants of the original Spanish conquistadores mingle in the massed carnival throngs with impromptu charros from Illinois, Indiana or Iowa—a far cry from other days when men fought with swords and blunderbusses for desert lands that today yield millions of dollars annually in citrus and vegetable harvests.

Daughters of prominent Spanish families who first settled in Brownsville and built it into a thriving frontier city take part in the celebration each year.

Such is the romantic atmosphere that pervades the four days and nights of the Charro Days Fiesta in Brownsville.

At night there is dancing under the royal palms, lovers speak soft words in the shadows of citrus groves along ancient trails, while nationally famous Latin orchestras beat out tropical rhythm. Strolling bands of troubadours wander through the century-old streets, singing love songs for a smile or a pretty nod.

Nurse Recalls War Days of '98

VAN NUYS, CALIF.—Favorite patient of doctors and nurses at Birmingham veterans' hospital here is Florence Robinson, 92, a nurse of the Spanish-American war.

Although blind for the last nine years, Miss Robinson keeps to a busy schedule at the hospital.

Miss Robinson has never worn a uniform. When she enlisted in the nurses corps in 1898, it was the first time the government had included nurses in the armed forces and there were no prescribed uniforms. Each nurse wore the uniform of her own school.

When she began her career in 1898 during a typhoid epidemic at Chickamauga Park, Ga., nurses worked 12 hours a day in thick mud caring for men who lay on rough boards in tents. Pay was $30 a month. Ambulances at that time were horse-drawn wagons.

THROW AWAY HARSH LAXATIVES!

Millions Have Ended Constipation with Healthful Fresh Fruit Drink

YOUR favorite pineapple design makes this square of dozens of uses. Crochet one and you've a doily; three, a scarf; twenty, a cloth.

Don't form the habit of depending on harsh, gripping laxatives until you've tried this easy, healthful way millions now use to keep regular.

It's fresh lemon juice and water taken first thing in the morning—just as soon as you get up, the juice of one Sunkist Lemon in a glass of water. Taken thus, on an empty stomach, it stimulates normal bowel action, day after day, for most people.

And lemons are actively good for you. They're among the richest sources of vitamin C, which combats fatigue, helps resist colds and infections. They supply vitamins B₁ and P, aid digestion and help alkalize the system.

Try this grand wake-up drink 10 mornings. See if it doesn't help you! Use California Sunkist Lemons.

Food and More Food

DEMAND for foodstuffs for relief purposes abroad this year will exceed previous expectations. . . . Virtually all farm products of the Middle West will be drawn on for foreign consumption as fast as made available by producers. . . . There is little likelihood of surpluses being built up in any position. . . . These are conclusions of the trade after thorough perusal of the recent report by the International Emergency Food Council.

Outstanding in the relief program is the large quantity of corn expected to be moved in the next six months, all of which is labeled for human consumption. . . . Volume will depend greatly on the speed of driers' operations and transportation to ports. . . . Virtually all corn will be kiln-dried, it is believed, to avoid spoilage, as moisture content of this crop continues to run high.

Inability to make wheat available at seaboard points advantageously is responsible for the decision to use corn. . . . That cereal will be moved from Atlantic points, whereas wheat will be handled from gulf and Pacific ports. . . . About 60,000,000 bushels of cereals are allotted for movement in March, of which 20,000,000 will be corn. A total of 500,000,000 bushels of all grains is wanted by June 30.

The need for animal fats and meats rates second only to grains. . . . In fact, the report states, it is not possible to estimate the magnitude of total demand. . . . Excluding Germany, slightly more than 6,000,000 tons of imports are required to attain goals. . . . World export supplies in 1947 are not expected to exceed 3,000,000 tons.

Corn quotas and acreage allotments are out of place in a situation such as exists now and which appears probable in the next year or two. That is why the Department of Agriculture announced last week that corn, including food and feed products but not including protein meal and oils, was removed from the list of agricultural products certified as in short supply.

Will Couty Nurses Tops In Health Education

Recently we reviewed the major function of three divisions of the Will County Health Department, namely, Communicable Disease Control, Sanitary Engineering, and the Social Hygiene Clinic. This week we will consider another division, that of Public Health Nursing.

During the past year the Will County Health Department staff has had one Supervising Nurse, six full time District Nurses and one special Venereal Disease Nurse. In addition to the requirements of being a graduate of an accredited high school and a graduate of a recognized school of nursing the District Public Health Nurses have all had special academic work in a recognized school of Public Health. A nurse must meet the qualifications as outlined in The Illinois Nursing Act before she will be issued a certificate of registration as a Certified Public Health Nurse.

The District Nurses have devoted approximately one half of their time to the public schools outside the Joliet and Lockport areas and to the parochial schools of the County.

Since the new Health and Physical Education Law which became effective of July 1, 1944, requires school children to have a physical examination every four years the Health Department Nurses have assisted the local physicians in carrying out school health examination programs. The Health Department has furnished cumulative health records for these examinations. The nurse interprets the remediable physical defects to the parent, teacher and pupil, and they all work together to meet the health need of the child.

During the past school year under the guidance of the Sanitary Engineer and the Nurse, the pupils of each school studied the environmental sanitary conditions of their own school. The nurse is on hand for immediate consultative service to teachers and parents regarding needed precautions and control measures during outbreaks of acute communicable disease in her area.

Suggestions from the Nurse for Special Health Education projects is a popular request from the teachers. Some school children studied the "Basic Seven" in Nutrition class as they watched the effects of good and poor diets during a rat feeding experiment; others learned the foods important in growth through height and weight programs and several schools had tuberculosis educational programs preceding the Mobile x-ray Unit. Movies, bulletins and other educational materials were provided for the teacher for special school health programs.

Another important contribution of the County Health Department Nurse has been health guidance for the expectant mother, the new born infant, and the pre-school child. The County Health Department provides for the pediatric and public health nursing services at the regular monthly Well Child Conference held at Crete. They also provide Clinician Services for the weekly Child Health Conference in Joliet.

Necessary follow up visits for the Tuberculosis cases are made by the Public Health Nurse in her respective area.

The public health nurse receives requests from community organizations in her area, as home bureau, Parent Teachers Association, Federalized programs. She prepares demonstrations, talks, shows health movies, participates in radio programs, helps with health exhibits, and provides health educational materials as requested.

Every day the Public Health nurse fulfills a great variety of demands as she strives for preventions of illness, improved health habits, prompt remedial care, and more intelligent planning for positive health for the people in her area.

Will County has had the service of a County Health Department since July, 1942. This Health Department was adopted by resolution by the Board of Supervisors September, 1945, so that the citizens of Will County would have the opportunity to vote on a tax levy for Public Health Services in the November election.

International Harvester Shows New Trucks

International Harvester has just announced a new line of motor trucks. The initial showing of these new "K-B" models was in Fort Wayne, Ind. a few days ago before a gathering of several hundred members of the press from all parts of the United States, and officials and department heads of the company. Included in the exhibit were Harvester's recently introduced "Western" models.

At the same time, according to Ceward Batson, the New Lenox Lumber and Hardware Co., International Truck dealer, ceremonies epitizing the Company's 40 years of progress in the truck industry were conducted.

"International Harvester is introducing new models now for two reasons," said Mr. Batson. "First, to provide operators with improved truck performance, and second, to provide operators with better looking trucks. Even though new models are being introduced production has not been slowed down. The old models are rolling off the line right alongside the new ones, without a single moment's assembly line stoppage. Trucks are too badly needed to stop production for a minute.

"This year has a special meaning for International Harvester, quite aside from the fact that we are building new models. This is Harvester's fortieth anniversary year as a truck man. began production of the then impressive schedule of one hundred International Auto Wagons, high wheeled, low powered vehicles designed, as we then said, 'to pull the farmer out of the mud'.

"Contrast between the first International and the new 40th anniversary models is marked. But as antique looking as the 1907 Auto Wagon is, it was the glamor wagon of its day and served American businessmen and farmers both profitably and well.

Mr. Batson also called attention to the fact that there are 95 new features or mechanical improvements, 21 basic models in the International truck line, 15 KB models and 6 W or Western models. The gross vehicle weight ratings of these 21 models range from 4,400 to 90,000 pounds.

Edison Centennial
February 11
1847 • 1947

Better Living Began with Edison's Birth a Century Ago

WITH the birth of Thomas Alva Edison the greatest period of progress in the history of the world began. Many men of vision have, of course, contributed to this scientific advance, but Edison more than any other one man personifies the progress of the era.

In 1847, when Edison was born, America was still a vast pioneering country. Adventurers, lured west by gold, jogged overland by stage-coaches. In the cities of the east flickering gas lamps lit the drawing rooms, but oil lamps flourished throughout the parlors of the "back country." This was the world of the youthful Edison.

Today, through the development of his 1,110 patented inventions, Edison is a dominant influence in all of our lives. During the century since his birth, we have come to accept as commonplace the incandescent and fluorescent lamp, talking pictures, movies, phonographs and scores of other direct results of his genius. Less well known, but of great importance, were, for instance, Edison's development of the basic principles of electronics and the invention of the long rotary kiln which made large scale cement production a reality.

Even during Edison's lifetime, standards of living throughout the world rose spectacularly. As Edison's work went on, his inventions created jobs, not only in the electrical industry but also in many other industries. A recent estimate shows that about one working person in nine now owes his job to an idea which originated in the mind of Thomas Alva Edison.

Only by imagining oneself living in this world without the wealth of advantages bestowed by Edison can we fully understand and evaluate the personal legacy which this great American left to each of us. Businessmen charting the advance of their firms, homemakers flicking the switch which takes the gloom out of washday... people everywhere, at movies, listening to radios, phonographs or merely reading in their homes, enjoy a better life because of him.

Today, we join the world in celebrating the centennial anniversary of the birth of Edison. We are proud to be among the industries which today carry forward the developments he started.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Lem's Dogs vs Thad's Chickens

Running a newspaper, you get to know a lot about human nature.

Thad Phipps was in the other day, all burned up. Wanted me to run an item on how Lem Martin's dog had raided his chickens again, and ought to be put away by law.

I told him: "Lem was in on Saturday. Said you shouldn't be allowed to keep those chickens so close to his house—and in a residential zone, at that."

Thad shuts up right pronto then. And that very evening I see him making his peace with Lem at Andy Botkin's Garden Tavern —over a friendly glass of beer.

From where I sit, anyone can find something in his neighbor to complain about. (Some folks may even disagree with Thad's right to enjoy that glass of beer with Lem!) But where would we be if everybody tried to have a law passed against everything they disagreed with? We wouldn't have many neighbors left!

"LOVE"

The Golden Text was:

"Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; . . . He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love" (1 John 4: 7, 8).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible:

"I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them, according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his lovingkindnesses. . . . In his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old" (Isa. 63: 7, 9)

CLEAR AND DEFINITE LAWS NEEDED ON LABOR MATTERS

BEFORE THE PRESENT session of congress adjourns there will be a number of extremely important bills enacted into law. Such legislation can, and should, remedy many of the economic and governmental ills that have beset us for the past several years. To be sure of such an accomplishment the new legislation must definitely and explicitly express the intent and meaning of congress. Such laws should not be open to two or more interpretations, as too often has been the case in the past.

When it is left to the courts to interpret what congress meant, the human element will enter the decisions. When the judge finds in the law the opportunity to interpret it in the direction of his personal inclinations, you may be sure he will do so, for the judge is human.

The Supreme court has been called upon to interpret the meaning of congress in the LaGuardia anti-injunction law, that is, whether or not it prohibits injunctions in the case of strikes against the government. So long as two or more interpretations are possible it can be expected that any judge whose personal leanings are on the side of labor will interpret that law on the side of labor. The integrity or motives of such a judge cannot be reasonably questioned. The law was not definite and explicit in expressing the meaning of congress. John L. Lewis is basing his hopes on just such a situation, and he has a good chance of winning his case. The bill was weak in phraseology. It may not have clearly expressed the meaning of congress.

In the matter of lawmaking the courts have the final say. They can pronounce a law constitutional. They also can interpret its meaning if it is in any way indefinite.

We are expecting congress to pass legislation that will provide a firm basis for the relationship between management, capital and labor. We want that law definite and explicit. It can be so expressed as to leave no question as to the meaning of congress. For the courts there should be nothing to decide other than the question of violation of the law.

This calls for a more careful scrutiny of important bills; a careful study of what they say, and how they say it, so there can be no possible difference of opinion.

The people want no laxity in the drafting of the laws that are to untangle the snarls in which the nation has become entangled. They want no "jokers," no double talk. They want the new laws expressed in plain, definite and explicit language, so the courts will have no opportunity to misinterpret their meaning.

IT IS NOT my province to question the reasons assigned by John L. Lewis for calling off the coal strike last December. There can be but small doubt that it did mollify congress in the matter of labor-management legislation. It did reduce public demand for punitive measures, and did serve the cause of organized labor. It is to be hoped it will not so far affect congress as to stop the outlawing of the closed shop, the check-off system and the tax of the unions on production as instituted by Lewis.

ONLY TWO 'ELDER STATESMEN' AMERICA HAS HAD but few of what we term "elder statesmen." Following his retirement from the presidency, Washington was the first to be so considered. He was an American, not a partisan. Through the years of our existence as a nation we have had comparatively few who qualified for such a title. At the present time we have two who are generally so recognized. One is Bernard Baruch, and the other is former Pres. Herbert Hoover. The statesmanly ability of both is fully recognized. Neither one will be a candidate for election to any office on a partisan ticket. Baruch has never held, nor sought, an elective office, and Mr. Hoover, at Philadelphia in 1936, announced that he never again would seek, or accept, a nomination on a partisan ticket. While both men have party affiliations, the people think of them as, first of all, Americans. In the role of "elder statesmen," accorded to them by the American people, both have given valiant service to the nation.

"WHEN THE DEVIL is sick, the devil a saint would be," applies to both labor and management. The difficulty is finding a permanent cure for both.

WE AGAIN NEED the foresight and ability of an Andrew Mellon. Following World War I his first thought was to reduce what we then thought was a staggering debt of some 29 billion dollars. We balanced the budget and paid off a considerable portion of that debt before we talked much of tax reduction.

WNU Features.

THE only way to do anything is to go ahead and do it, my daddy used to say. And my daddy is a wonderful guy, Miss Evans. He's the best daddy in the world, and I know. That's the reason I'm writing this letter to you—because of my daddy. I'm writing to you because I don't want to hurt him. And I know you can help me, if you want to.

You will, won't you, Miss Evans? You've given me a good scolding many a time, but I remember the last one mostly, because it was only yesterday, just before arithmetic class.

I had forgotten to do my arithmetic lesson. I was glancing through the problems and saw that if I started on them now I wouldn't get three problems solved before class would begin. So I slipped a note to Mary Jane behind me, asking her if she'd let me take her copy. Mary Jane is the smartest girl in the class, and we're pretty good friends, so she let me take it.

I started copying her work, and believe me, Miss Evans, I really felt guilty doing it. I felt like a traitor. I was sure I could have done the problems myself if I had the time, because arithmetic is one of my easiest subjects.

But I copied the assignment anyway, and when I started to slip the papers back to Mary Jane, that's when you looked up. Your eyes met mine first thing, then moved to the papers in my hand.

I didn't know what to do with myself, then, I was so scared. "Shamed, too, I suppose. I didn't know whether to drop the papers on Mary Jane's desk, or whether to put them back on mine. I guess you know how I felt.

Well, I hurried, and I caught the bus despite the deep snow.

"Well, you know what I did, because you told me to do it.

"Dickie," you said, "please bring those papers here to me." I hesitated a second. I felt everybody's eyes on me, and I must've gotten awful red, because that's how my face felt. I got up slowly, and walked up and handed the papers to you.

You looked at the first page, and you said, "So—you're copying Mary Jane's arithmetic assignment. Is that the kind of work you make a habit of doing, Dickie?"

"Oh, no, sir," I said. I know I should have said "No, ma'am," but I didn't think of it then. "I've never copied anybody's work before," I said. And that's the truth.

"All right. But you must learn never to copy someone else's work, Dickie. I'm sorry, but you are going to stay in school tonight, and do your arithmetic lesson."

YOU knew what that meant as well as I did. It meant that I would miss my bus—and we live three miles from school. That's a long walk when it's winter and snowing.

I was hardly through with my second problem when you said "Dickie!"

I looked up. "Dickie," you said, and you were smiling a little, "get your work together and take it home with you. You're leaving."

My heart started to pound in my chest. "You mean it?" I asked.

"I mean it," you said, and you were still smiling. "You better hurry, if you want to catch the bus."

I never told daddy about that, either. I almost told him a couple of times while he was helping me on my model plane after supper, but I didn't. Finally, he said:

"It's your bed-time, son. You want to get up fresh and ready for school, don't you?" And I said "sure, daddy," and went to my room.

I guess I was half asleep when I heard voices downstairs. It got me wide awake. I crawled quietly out of bed and put my ear close to the floor to listen. And that was when I heard you saying to daddy:

"I'm sure that Dickie and I can get along swell together, Dick. I have a feeling that he likes me, and I like him. I like him very much. Matter of fact, probably as much as I love his father."

You laughed then, and daddy said, "I thought I'd better not tell him about it right away, but I suppose now it'll be all right. I'm sure you'll be a wonderful mother to him, Ann, and he a good son to you. He's a good boy. But who should know better than you? You're his teacher. You're with him more than I am."

You see? Please don't tell my daddy, will you, Miss Evans?

The Broadway Express

The Stage Door: Craig Reynolds, first actor to enlist (and the first to get hit with a Purple Heart), gets so few roles these days he has to take odd jobs to balance the budget. . . . Salaries are rolling back. The $200 a week comediotrities again are being offered $200, instead of the wartime bribe paychecks—and accepting them. . . . Profit on "The Jolson Story" now is figured "in excess of five million bux." . . . The dog in "Lovely Me" has been ordered to move from his boarding house because he comes in too late (after curtain time) and wakes up the other dogs. . . . The role of the fencing champ (he appears only in the first act) of "Cyrano" is so strenuous he has to alternate with another. . . . And you have troubles? Two days after Helen Walker's producer announced she would dance "for the first time" in her next role, she was badly fractured in a crash.

Midtown Vignette: Norman Cordon is the 6'4" basso of the Met. He is also the top male singer in the revived "Street Scene." . . . Norman believes in direct action. . . . He was dining in a midtown spot when a clunk at the next table slandered FDR and boosted Hitler. . . . Cordon went over, grabbed the nuisance in his arms, carried him to the street and dumped him into the gutter, saying: "You're spoiling my dinner, Adolf!"

The Press Box: Georgia offered a striking illustration of the methods used by Fascists to take advantage of confusion and strong-arm their way to power—completely disregarding the laws. Governor Arnall deserves support for refusing to be pushed around by the Talmadge hoodlums. The actions of those muscle-men gave America a chilling example of fascism in action. . . . A Bawstin gazette observed so many generals and admirals are getting top jobs, Washington is no place for a felt hat. . . . After giving the news from Dixie the once-over, you'd never think the Emancipation Proclamation was signed 84 years ago. . . . The Jersey Journal solved the mystery of the "J. S." on the new FDR dime after checking with the government. They do not stand for Joe Stalin. They are the initials of John Sinnock, chief of the Philly mint.

Character Study: He under pays his help but overtips the waiter. . . . He takes cabs to avoid subway crowds but wrestles through crowded theater lobbies for a few puffs on a ciggie. . . . He greets every corny line in a show with a cornier comment but thinks a guy is a celebrity when he has more wives than children.

The Late Watch: Those stratosphere salaries paid H'wood stars are coming down fast. Drop in box office receipts, curtailed production, etc., have studios pruning costly player rosters. Many stars, however, are willing to take a shave. Supply and demand, you know. . . . Sonora will market 20 million new black label platters at 39 cents retail. That's 20 to 40 p.c. under current market and is the first price break in this field since Dec. 7, 1941. . . . Tropical Park track reports attendance was up 50,000 but the "take" is down 10 per cent. . . . The police have notified all night clubs they must be closed and empty at 4 a. m. This is very funny considering most joints are empty much earlier.

New York Novelties: Justin McCarthy, the young lone-wolf stick-up fool (who was collared recently), is well known to Broadwaysenheims. . . . He sold several of them plenty of "shares" in an electronic and helicopter firm which flopped. . . . Most of his suckers are no little miffed with Justin because "he didn't at least apologize" with some of the loot he got away with—sticking up night club patrons in their cars—as they waited for lights to change. . . . He almost talked a famed radio star into starting a manufacturing company with him. . . . One of his stock victims was ready to tell the gendarmes about him six months ago (which would have ended his career of crime before it started), but Justin talked him out of it. . . . The irony of it: Had he gone to the hoosegow then the term would have been short. Now he may spend his life in jail.

Truman's admiration for Sec'y of State Marshall amounts to hero worship. He is said to have referred to Marshall as "the greatest living American." . . . Alan Ladd doesn't know when he's well off; just bought a coast night club. . . . Despite the slump everywhere, gambling houses across the river report a 15 per cent uptake. . . . Bookies are blowing their tops because too many femmes are hording into their racket. . . . Mrs. FDR shaking hands with a passerby admirer near the Sherry-Netherland hotel.

THE GEORGIA MESS

WASHINGTON.—It was carefully hushed up at the time, but the political mess in Georgia might have been avoided if the justice department had gone ahead with a secret probe it conducted of the Talmadge election.

Last fall, the justice department had FBI men making a thorough check of Talmadge intimidation and racial discrimination at the polls. This, under recent supreme court rulings, now is the direct concern of the federal government and can be prosecuted as a criminal offense.

The FBI investigation showed that Talmadge had sent instructions to the Georgia primary polls aimed at preventing Negroes from voting. Although the evidence was conclusive, the justice department finally got cold feet. The case was dropped.

One obstacle the justice department ran up against was the fact that Eugene Talmadge was sick and they couldn't get to him for interrogation. Also son Herman Talmadge outbluffed the justice boys and refused to answer questions unless a stenographer was present.

Final factor, however, was the fear that federal government intervention in Georgia would boomerang, hurting the very same liberal forces the justice department wanted to help.

MARSHALL'S WAR LEAK

One of the most significant things to watch regarding the state department under General Marshall will be whether he continues Jimmie Byrnes' policy of open diplomacy.

No secretary of state since Charles Evans Hughes has been as frank with the press as Byrnes. Hughes handled all press conferences himself, was a master at giving important background information, was generally frank and forthright. Byrnes, while not handling many conferences himself, went further than Hughes in making sure that a competent state department official gave newsmen a general picture of what was happening inside diplomatic negotiations.

Byrnes also didn't object to most news leaks; felt the American people had the right to know about foreign policy.

However, some of those allegedly close to General Marshall say he may tighten up on the Byrnes policy and crack down on news leaks. This, of course, may be unfair to the new secretary of state; for, based on his own past record, Marshall has been quite a "leaker" himself. In fact, one cable seized from the files of the German foreign office now reveals that General Marshall was woefully indiscreet in the early stages of the European war and inadvertently let out important secrets to the enemy.

AIDS TAX EVADERS

Some of the nation's biggest black-marketeers and on-the-make war contractors are getting away with income tax evasion, thanks to a snarled-up situation inside the justice department.

Around 300 criminal income tax cases are awaiting prosecution, with little chance of rapid action. Behind them is another 1,200 income tax fraud cases in the treasury, soon ready for transmittal to the bottlenecked justice department. Meanwhile, the black-marketeers and certain war contractors have been getting away with murder.

CHURCH AND LABOR

It hasn't been announced officially, but prominent church leaders are beginning an important behind-the-scenes study in connection with the government's efforts to maintain industrial peace. There have been several private meetings recently at which both Protestant and Catholic clergymen sat down and traded ideas with industrial and labor spokesmen on the question of labor relations.

While the churchmen deny that they are endeavoring to make religion a "bargaining factor" in the settlement of labor disputes, they feel that the church should play a definite part in improving work and pay standards. They also believe it is the duty of the church to inject a "greater sense of moral responsibility and understanding" in bargaining between employers and employees.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Washington's poorest guesser is the Pentagon official who transferred General Marshall from a plush suite of offices at the Pentagon to a small, two-desk room just four days before the general was named secretary of state. . . . Henry Wallace has jacked the New Republic's circulation up from 40,000 to 100,000 weekly in one month. . . . Harold Smith, former director of the budget, may replace Jack Hutson as assistant secretary general of the United Nations.

S.; (2) hold a degree of doctor of osteopathy from a college or university recognized by VA; (3) have completed an internship satisfactory to VA; (4) hold a license to practice osteopathy in one of the states, territories or the District of Columbia, and (5) meet VA prescribed physical standards.

Questions and Answers

Q. My husband was dismissed from the navy under a general court martial. He was in bad shape when he was in the navy and was in several serious actions and we believe he was not responsible for his breach of the law for which he was court martialled. If we can show that he was not in his right mind at the time of his commission of the offense could he then get the benefits of the G.I. bill to which he otherwise would be entitled?—Mrs. R. C., Biloxi, Miss.

A. Yes. If it can be shown conclusively that your husband was insane at the time the offense was committed he could apply for all the benefits of the G.I. bill if he is otherwise qualified. Proof must be offered to the administrator of veterans affairs. The same answer would apply to conscientious objectors who refused to perform military service or refused to wear the uniform, or even to a deserter, or in the case of the acceptance of the resignation of an officer for the good of the service, if it can be proved to the satisfaction of the Veterans' administrator they were insane at the time of the commission of the offense.

Q. Does the government pay for artificial limbs required by amputees who are veterans of any branches of the armed services?—J. A. B., Ada, Oklahoma.

A. Yes, the law provides that Veterans' administration furnish the required artificial limbs or other prosthetic or orthopedic appliances of permanent type, and even special clothing made necessary by wear of such appliances for service-connected disease or injury held to be aggravating the disability from a service-connected disease or injury. Also hospitalized patients and persons receiving domiciliary care have entitlement under the conditions above and in some cases where the disability is not service connected. Also retired officers and retired enlisted men of the army, navy, marine corps and coast guard who lost a limb through injury or disease incurred in line of duty in the military or naval service at any time also may be furnished artificial limbs. They also are entitled to fitting and training in their use.

Q. I am the wife of a World War I veteran and he has never drawn a pension. We have five children in school. Now he is disabled and has a blood disease caused from getting too hot in the drill field. He also has fallen arches caused from wearing hobnail shoes. Both are on his service record. He tried to get a pension several years ago but didn't get it. I want to know if there is any way we can get a pension as we are badly in need of it.—Mrs. E. G. F., Ellisville, Miss.

A. There is a regional office of Veterans' administration at Jackson and sub-offices at Greenwood, Hattiesburg, Meridian, Tupelo and Indianola. Your only chance is to present your case to your nearest office for a decision by VA. If your husband is totally and permanently disabled from non-service connected disabilities he would be entitled to about $50 per month and if he is 65 years old or older and his disability is total he would be entitled to a $80 pension.

Q. Our son is a disabled veteran and is taking vocational training under the law for that purpose and is in a city about 50 miles away from us. Can you tell us if he is entitled to any time off for vacation and, if he is, does his subsistence allowance stop while he is away?—Mr. and Mrs. D. A. W., Garden City, Fla.

A. Yes, he is entitled to a leave of absence not in excess of 30 days in any consecutive 12 months and is entitled to his subsistence payments during that time. He can get full details at school.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

DOAN'S PILLS

LAST LOVER

BY Helen Topping Miller

Jill McFarlane, whose father, Richard, disappeared in World War I, falls in love with Spang Gordon, a young lieutenant. He tells her that her brother, Ric, is seeing a divorcee and she goes to camp to investigate. Ric avoids her but she later sees him with Sandra Calvert, an older, hardened woman. Captain Mackey, known as "Old Cy-anide," tells her he knew her mother many years ago. She feels she knows him. Spang calls to say good-bye. Later, while riding with Dave Patterson, a family friend secretly in love with her mother, Julia, she is thrown from her horse and taken to a hospital. That night Richard returns from the dead to visit Julia.

CHAPTER X

Julia ignored the interruption. "He spent two months trying to find something, some record, some grave—anything that would end our suspense. He went through dozens of hospitals, even the insane places; he even went out with crews of men who were opening graves! It was a nerve-racking experience for him—and not too happy for me, Richard."

"Sorry," He let his gaze fall, let his clasped hands dangle between his knees. "I didn't think you'd be concerned. I thought you'd be relieved to be rid of me."

"Your conscience must have been more acute than we gave you credit for," said his father, scornfully. "If it hadn't been for Julia's obstinacy, I'd have had you declared legally dead long ago."

Richard laughed, a short, difficult bark. "Legally, I am dead. Richard McFarlane no longer exists. Not on any record or roster, at least. I've been Roger Mackey for twenty years now. There was a lot of confusion after the armistice, and I happened to come into possession—accidentally, of course—of a passport and some other papers. It suited me not to be Richard McFarlane any longer. I wanted to start over. I stayed on in Paris for a few years and did pretty well."

"Gambling, as usual?" This from John I.

Richard's mouth lifted in a condescending, mirthless smile. That smile, too, was an aching piece of Julia's remembering.

"I got along," he said, "in various ways. And then things got rather nasty in France—there was all that argument about the debts, Americans weren't popular—so I came back to this country. I didn't know anything to get into—things were a little tough here too, you remember? So I went back to the army. This fellow—this Mackey, whose papers I had—had a commission. I got it renewed, I asked for service in Hawaii and got it. Then last year they sent me back. I'm at Ridley Field now."

Almost Julia cried out. Ric was at Ridley Field. But she caught herself in time, made a little movement toward her father-in-law, begging for silence. He caught the gesture, or perhaps he did not remember, did not connect Ric with any of this. The old forgot easily.

Richard must not know about Ric. All their lives she had built their father up to heroic stature for her children, made him a splendor to admire, but knowing all the while what a false and crumbling foundation she built upon, how dangerous was the structure she raised if a fierce wind blew upon it. But she must not destroy it now.

She must not tear Richard down, offer that ruin to Richard's son. She must not destroy that pictured inheritance of gallantry. Ric was not strong and courageous like Jill. He had all the weaknesses of the McFarlane men; if he had inherited any strength from her it was latent, it had not begun its growth. Now she could not risk giving him a father who had callously abandoned him even before he had learned to speak that father's name.

So she said, rather flatly, "You were at Pearl Harbor, Richard?"

His face changed, twisted. His eyes shifted. "Yes, I was there—at Hickam Field. Now I'm at Ridley. But I've worked for what I've got in the army."

"So," Julia let her breath out, thankful—oh, so terribly thankful that Jill was away! "So you are Roger Mackey now. But why, Richard—why? All this talk, and I still don't understand it. You must not have cared about us at all. You didn't want to see us again, your own father—your own children?"

"I did think about the kids, of course," he said, "and you, too, Dooley. But I hadn't been a very successful husband. You were pretty well fed up with me when I left."

A Three-Way Conversation

"I was nineteen years old!" Julia protested. "I'd loved you and married you, and then I'd been left alone, for weeks at a time—not knowing where you were, even hungry! I had a baby, and then I was going to have another right away—and then it was war, and John I. got that commission for you, because he thought war was what you needed—that it might quiet that restlessness in you—and so you went away. And left me with nothing! Nothing but this shabby old house, this mortgaged land—and no one to turn to till Dave Patterson happened to come to Washington, and he found me and sent for John I."

"I gave you money when I had it, Dooley," he said.

"And borrowed it back again when the horses were running at Bowie!" she thought bitterly, but she did not say it. She said dully, "You must have been very sick of me. I must have cried too much, been frightened too much, left alone there in that cheap little flat. It was my fault, perhaps. I was too young. I'd always had people to take care of me. I was silly enough to think that all women were cared for when they married; it was quite a shock when I learned that that wasn't always true. I know I must have failed you in a lot of ways, Richard. I must not have been a strong person then—a strong woman might have changed you. But you failed me, too, Richard. You failed us all!"

"Don't blame yourself, Dooley. The whole thing was a mistake. I merely happened to realize that before you did. I took the best way out of it, for you and for everybody."

"But you just can't come back this way—from the dead."

"You took a coward's way out," said his father. "Now—now that you're getting old and life isn't so gay and adventurous as it used to be, I suppose you think you should come back here and find a welcome? Find things exactly as they were before?"

Richard flared. His eyes took on that icy look that Julia remembered.

"Have I said that? Have I asked for anything?"

"Not yet. But you've made no decent excuse or explanation either. You walked out on Julia and left her to struggle alone."

"Not alone, John I. You've been a rock under my feet, you've been my strength and courage when I faltered!"

"You were all I had, Dooley," he said gently, "you and those kids."

"They're pretty well grown up now, I suppose?" Richard changed the subject with the facile ease that had always been his gift. "How are they?"

"They're very well." She would not tell him anything. Not about Ric, not about Jill's accident, nothing. He had no right to know. He had no rights at all. "Richard is twenty-seven, Jill's twenty-six."

Richard Offers No Solution

"Makes a man feel old. Are they like you, Dooley?" Richard asked.

"They're entirely unlike. But they're both McFarlanes."

"Married, either of them?"

"No, they're not married."

"At least I'm not a grandfather!" he said, smiling thinly. "Well, I'll push along. Due back for reveille tomorrow. Have to drive all night to make it."

"But, Richard, what happens now?" Julia cried. "What are you going to do?"

He faced her, and she felt herself receding, shrinking as she had always done when he looked at her with that cold, blue stare.

"What happens now depends on you, Dooley. As for what I'm going to do—so far as I know, nothing!"

"But—you can't just come back this way—from the dead!"

"I've never been dead. I came back because suddenly I wanted to see you, hear your voice again. If you mean shall I go back to being Richard McFarlane again, the answer is no. It would be awkward and embarrassing. I'm in the army. There's war going on. Till it's over, I'll concentrate on that."

"Richard, I've had twenty-five years of suspense. Surely you can spare me any more."

"If you create suspense for yourself, Dooley, I won't be able to do anything about it. But why create it? I'm assuming that to you I am not your husband any more."

"But you are my husband! Even though you choose to masquerade and wear a false name, though you've ignored me for more than half our lifetimes, though you knew where I was, when one word from you would have ended all this misery of uncertainty for me, you are still the man I was married to, Richard. You're still my children's father. Nothing can change that."

"You can change it if you like, Dooley."

"How can I change it? You mean I can divorce you? How can I divorce a man who doesn't exist? How could I explain it to your children?"

"The kids do complicate things, don't they? They might like me if they knew me. Though perhaps you've already attended to that?"

"I've given them a hero for a father!" Julia flamed.

"You did that for yourself, Dooley, not for me. You're a proud woman, your pride wouldn't let you keep a man in your life unless he was heroic. And you don't want your pretty picture torn to pieces now by the dismal reality. So I'll take myself off. You wouldn't want to shake hands, Father?"

John I. thrust his hands into his pockets, drawing in his brows.

"No, I wouldn't! You make me ashamed that I am also a McFarlane."

Without a word Richard walked out of the house. They heard his car roar off down the drive.

John I. sank into a chair and dropped his head into his hands. Julia went quietly and kissed the thinned spot on the top of his head. She did not speak. David was mourning the unworthiness of Ab-salom, and there were no words to touch the dignity of that grief.

She went numbly, groping for the stair rail, up to her room.

Somehow, always, she had known! Always, unaware perhaps at times, she had been waiting for this, feeling the pressure of odd, uncertain dread. There was a strange and psychic bond, a vibration that lived on between two people who had been married, and she knew now that that quivering tie lived on, bridging years and silence, binding her to Richard, even though the bond was bitter. Eventually it had drawn him back to her. She had seen the nostalgia in his eyes, though he had tried to hide it behind his old, cool arrogance.

And now what? What lay ahead? What threatened her, her peace of mind, her pride for her children?

There was Ric. What if Richard found out about Ric, learned where he was, made contact with his son? And then there was Dave. She knew that Dave loved her, with another kind of love, deeper, finer—no fire or passion, no young fever, but the lasting love of a man who would cherish a woman forever.

Julia flung herself down on the bed.

"Oh, Dave!" her heart cried out. "Now that it's too late, I do love you! And what am I going to do?"

Jill turned her head on the pillow, eased her body from the cramp of her splinted arm and taped shoulder.

"Dooley, you look simply ghastly!" she said. "I've never seen black hollows under your eyes before. What's worrying you besides me?"

"Nothing," Julia lied gallantly. "You're enough for one dose. Do I look so pathetic? I must need some vitamins or something. It's missing you so much, I guess."

Julia Fails to Deceive Jill

Jill drew the corners of her mouth in. "You're a rotten actress, Dooley. You're corny as heck and transparent as cellophane. When you hurt inside, it shows through like veins and things under a fluoroscope. Have you and Dave had a fight?"

"Of course not, silly. I haven't seen Dave since that Sunday. And why should we fight?"

"I don't know any good reason, but you are sort of difficult to understand at times, Dooley. You're so unpredictable. I think I know what you're thinking and feeling, and suddenly I discover I'm all lost and don't know you at all."

"I'm a mystery woman! Human enigma. But the fewer feelings we all have now the better off we'll be." Julia was being platinoidous, she knew, and undoubtedly Jill was probing past that evasive defense with her dry, shrewd young eyes. "We're fighting a lot of people who've done away with feeling."

"And now," said Jill, in a mocking voice, "the gentlemanly ushers will pass among you, and all the ladies will deposit their ballots in the basket, please. And don't vote for yourselves, girls!" she chirped in a bright falsetto. "Dooley, if you won't talk, shut up! Don't insult my intelligence with that stuff!"

WHEN billions, not mere millions, begin to pour into sport, you have a sure sign that the danger spot is ahead. Record-breaking crowds in college football have been a big factor in college professionalism, which has reached an all-time high. The tidal wave of gold, coming with a record boom also has broken all betting marks in both college and professional sport.

The wonder is that more scandals haven't crashed the headlines. This will happen unless sport in general gets stronger guardianship than it has drawn to date—with harsher penalties attached.

Just as pro football was coming to the finish of one of its greatest years, the Giant scandal developed and members of the Cleveland Browns, facing a championship play-off, got involved in a drunken brawl with police. In both New York and Cleveland, police were kept busy with pro football players for various reasons.

Merel Hapes was barred from the Giant-Bear game and Capt. Jim Daniels of the Browns was barred from the Brown-Yankee contest in Cleveland.

Rumors are not always true—but they at least demand closer watching than many of them have drawn. In the reign of Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, I happen to know that the old Judge was not only respected but also actually feared by anyone even lightly involved. I don't think anyone in sport today is afraid in any way of anyone directing sport.

Too Much Temptation

The Judge suspended Buck Weaver for life because Weaver, who hadn't taken a dime, had failed to report the conspiracy. I've had more than a few ball players ask me not to print the fact that I met them at some race track. They were afraid the judge might hear about it.

Any ball player caught playing around with a bookmaker or any type of gambler would have been up before the judge for rugged punishment in a rush.

Sport, financially, has gotten too big. Too much money is involved. Discipline has gone haywire. There has been too much temptation for the weak to resist, knowing the golden doubloons that are rolling around.

Too many, high in sport, have been asleep too long. The receipts have been too good. The dream has been too pleasant. They have refused to heed "the rumble of a distant drum."

The great majority of athletes are honest. Yet too many are undisciplined and too many out of condition. We have no sympathy for grown athletes who say they have been tricked or fooled by gamblers.

Any athlete, who after the first suggestion of a crooked proposition doesn't go directly to his coach, has no place in any game. It may come to the point that any athlete under any form of suspicion may have to be watched. Certainly any jockey, football, baseball or basketball player, to mention only a few entries, seen in company with any gambler needs watching.

Only a Few Crooks

As some philosopher once said "Rubes can think up more crooked things than crooks can invent."

In my opinion the great bulk of sport is clean. But among so many involved, there are sure to be a few who are either crooked or weak. And it takes only a few of these to upset the works. This is why the game today, college and pro, needs eternal vigilance and harsher penalties.

The average person you meet will tell you that college football players should be paid, considering the big money college athletic associations take in. This may be O. K. But don't call them amateurs. For they are not. They are only fake professionals.

I recall some years ago running across Dizzy Dean when Ole Diz looked worried.

"I've just been called before Judge Landis," he said.

"I haven't been doin' anything. But I'm still skinned."

That's the type of rulership sport needs today—an iron hand plus every known way of finding out what is going on. To take anything for granted is the surest way of wading into heavy trouble.

The Babe Still Tops

When Babe Ruth entered a New York hospital some time ago, an entire nation was shocked to hear that he was seriously ill. News of his recovery has lifted the pall.

In his day and time, the Babe has signed more autographs than any other member of the human race. No one can say how many thousands of baseballs he has signed. Babe lost count years ago. He was so popular that he finally had to seek some form of self-protection.

Strengthens Glass
Polyvinyl butyral finds use as an interlayer in laminated safety glass, replacing cellulose acetate, to render the glass capable of withstanding three times the strain previously possible. It dispenses with edge sealing, eliminates discoloration, and can be developed to give maximum safety properties.

Frosting Metal
In the new crystallization of "frosting" method of casting metal, the inside walls of the mold are cooled by circulating water, and the mold is immersed in molten metal and left until the outside walls are covered or frosted with an even layer of the desired thickness.

Careless Workers
A special study made by the National Safety Council of lost-time accident cases involving hand trucks revealed that in nine out of ten cases the injured person was working unsafely, and that in six out of ten cases unsafe conditions contributed to causing the accident.

Storing Canned Food
Canned foods should be stored where there will be as little deterioration as possible. A cool, dark, dry place should be provided. If a dark room cannot be provided, glass jars may be covered with brown paper.

Poisonous to Animals
Zinc phosphide, poisonous to all animals, is effective for both field mice and rat control. It is available only through the fish and wildlife service of the department of interior.

Remove Black Marks
To get rid of black-rubber heel marks on kitchen linoleum, rub them with a cloth that has been moistened with a bit of liquid wax, turpentine, or cleaning fluid. Apply it sparingly, but rub vigorously.

Paint Remover
Don't be in too much of a hurry when you use paint and varnish remover. Give it time to soften the coating. The old paint or varnish then should be easy to scrape off.

Hot Potatoes
The best way to serve all potatoes is quick-cooked and steaming hot, for the longer they stand exposed to the air the more vitamin C they lose.

First Cooking Stoves
The first cooking stoves were marketed in the United States in the 1830s. They were wood burning stoves with built-in ovens and a tank at the end for heating water.

Cleaning China
Never scour china or pottery. Hard rubbing and cleaning powders may cause the color or glit to fade and damage the smooth finish.
